SEEDS OF FREEDOM
Liberation Part II:
Surviving the Absolute

For the sake of integrity: At the time of writing I am still in the process of integration. My knowledge about jivanmukti is theoretical only but the topic is included nevertheless for completeness.

Liberation

1. Liberation is not an event in time but the giving up of the notion of bondage. It cannot be achieved, only uncovered, for the very search reinforces the imprisonment one wants to escape.
2. The one who claims to be liberated is still bound (by identity).

Realization: Stages of Awareness

3. Realization dawns when the unchanging ground of Being is recognized. This flash of awakening still alternates with identification and is often accompanied by disillusionment and a loss of interest in worldly life.
4. Stabilized realization is abidance as the unmoved witness, a luminous detachment from experience, not withdrawn but unentangled.
5. In it, mental fluctuations continue like pictures moving on a screen, yet they no longer obscure recognition or cause suffering (through resistance).
6. Integrated realization is the unity of awareness and experience, where witnessing dissolves into intimacy and life turns into a living pulse of Being.
7. It flowers naturally and in its own time, for nothing is ever separate from wholeness.

Embodiment and the Trap of No-Self

8. Being human is a gift of consciousness, to be fully lived and sanctified, so that every movement of life becomes a sacred expression of the One Reality.
9. Transcendence is not escape but the full inclusion of human experience while rising beyond its limitations. There is no exit door from earthly life and its pain as long as the body is alive.
10. Only identification and the sense of doer-ship need to be renounced for bondage doesn't lie in experience itself, but in attachment and aversion.
11. Living from "no-self" without embodiment is not spiritual freedom but spiritual suicide.

Integration: Jivanmukti

12. Life and death are gates of liberation. Remember: What remains unresolved in life returns in death.
13. Integrated realization balances the background awareness of non-duality with a foreground of individuality. It manifests itself as:
    - No ownership of thoughts, emotions or preferences.
    - Playing the human character wholeheartedly while knowing that it's not the Self.
    - A background sense of uncaused and unchanging happiness.
    - Experiencing the world as oneself - the one Self.
    - Individual essence fully embodied and expressed.

14. A jivanmukti is liberated as life, not from life, letting consciousness dance joyfully and spontaneously engaging with each moment, yet unattached.
15. True liberation is not merely freedom from bondage but freedom for love, which is the measure of understanding and the living expression of consciousness. Without it realization is disembodied.
16. When realization matures, focus shifts from self-enhancement to becoming a vessel of consciousness.

Purification from Conditioning

17. As the seeker advances, longing for experience turns into longing for freedom (from compulsion and unconscious momentum), the last prison on the way.
18. This momentum is driven by samskaras: incomplete movements of consciousness seeking resolution. They are both active, shaping experience during waking life, as well as latent, surfacing only in dreams or subtle thoughts.
19. The thought waves of the lower three chakras are like ocean currents beneath a calm sky. When engaged with they destabilize non-dual abidance.
20. Witnessing self-liberates the mind by letting impressions unfold and fade naturally, thereby dissolving their charge.
21. Once the mind is turned transparent and the seeds of karma are burned, continuity becomes conscious rather than compulsive.

Wheel of Return

22. Continuity beyond form is not survival of a personal self but the unbroken radiance of universal “I Am”. From this uncaused and self-shining wholeness arise countless individual essences, each a distinct node through which the Absolute experiences itself.
23. Essence is one’s unique scent of “I Am” that exists beyond life and death. Each essence is like a drop of water reflecting the one moon differently.
24. The soul is the vehicle that carries essence through time. It is the field in which tendencies, karmic imprints and memories reside, evolving through experience to more fully express essence.
25. What survives death is the information encoded in the soul: patterns and potentialities lying dormant in the storehouse of consciousness like seeds awaiting the right condition to sprout. When desire for experience remains, these seeds mature into further embodiment. Yet essence neither moves nor changes, shining through each arising form, forever free and untouched.
26. Rebirth, then, is not the migration of a self but the moment-to-moment continuity of identity and the unfolding of cause and effect, like waves forming from prior waves.

Bindu: Seed of Creation

27. Bindu is the source of infinite possibilities, the womb from which all universes arise.
28. The ultimate freedom of consciousness is creative, sovereign and self-luminous, manifesting free will as Divine play.

29. When consciousness is no longer driven by unresolved fear and desire, it expresses itself from freedom and creative love, awake to its own source. This is called liberated rebirth.
30. Karmic rebirth arises when latent tendencies and unresolved impulses compulsively organize into a new lifeform to find resolution, potentially leading to repetition and further bondage.

Dying Consciously

31. At death, the layers of embodiment dissolve in sequence:
    - The gross body disintegrates at physical death.
    - The astral body disintegrates at rebirth.
    - The causal body, the repository of karmas and samskaras, disintegrates at liberation.
32. After physical disintegration, subtle realms of mind arise within consciousness, where one encounters personal projections, ancestral imprints and archetypal patterns.
33. Freedom from compulsive rebirth arises when the samskaras binding consciousness to form are released and the Self abides in its own source, for one who rests in their true nature transcends karma. Such a liberated field of awareness needs to be cultivated amidst daily life.
34. From bindu liberated consciousness may:
    - Dissolve into its own source without compulsion to return.
    - Choose incarnation in full awareness and service.
    - Collapse infinite potentiality into a sovereign subtle universe within the multiverse, sustained by one's mind.

The Breath of the Absolute

35. The multiverse rises and falls with the breath of the Absolute. With each inhalation, all the worlds dissolve into the unmanifest, with each exhalation, they reappear.
36. Even in dissolution, nothing is lost. The microcosm of earthly existence mirrors the macrocosm of eternity. Knowing this liberates one from fear of death.
